

INVASION OF THE JITNEY BUS

Remarkable Spread of the 5 Cent Automobile Ride in All Parts of the Country

"NO, MA'AM," said the chauffeur very earnestly, "it's not a joke. It's a jitney, and I can assure you it is no joke."

The lady's mistake was a natural one, considering the fact that she is a New Yorker. Expecting when she entered the automobile to be obliged to break a $10 bill to pay her fare, it was an overwhelming surprise to her to learn that the fare was only 10 cents to the next town and that she could ride in the car for ten minutes or so at an expense of only 5 cents.

Hence her question and the reply just quoted, which she received from her chauffeur. Her ride really cost her 42 cents in the way of time, for later in the day she wrote home in high glee: "I have been riding in an automobile for a whole hour for 30 cents."

Had she not been a New Yorker, or had she travelled much of late, she would not have been surprised, for it is with the jitney as it has been with so many other innovations and improvements and conveniences. New York is probably destined to be the last place of importance in the whole United States where the public will be allowed to enjoy the benefits of it.

This is not because there are no enterprising citizens ready and anxious to embark in the business of running automobiles as common carriers of passengers over a given route at 5 cents per. Oh, no! Whether it would pay or not, there is no possibility of doubting that a great number of citizens are ready and even anxious to make the experiment, but as Marshall P. Wilder used to say of the many thousands of Irishmen who were under arms in their native country longing to strike a blow at their hated oppressors, "The police won't let them."

But, after all, the police in New York are not to be blamed for not allowing jitneys to be run. They would protect the jitney driver as willingly as they would stop him, if he could get a permit. As the matter stands, the greatest city in the country is the only one in which nobody can get authority to run a jitney.

In fact there may possibly be citizens of New York who do not even know what a jitney is. A jitney, then, was originally a coin as small as a nickel, or a counter or chip representing no greater value than five cents. When small capi-

DOC HORNE AND HIS FRIENDS--By George Ade

"Is this the man who got the money?" asked the court.

"His partner got it."

"You told me when you swore out the warrant that this man had got money and merchandise from you under false pretences," said the court.

"Well, he did get it, indirectly."

"How do you know he did?"

"Because he and Smith were partners. The card there shows that this man was president of the company."

"That's no proof. Did you ever see this man before?"

"Well—no, but his partner, Smith—"

"Prove that partnership," said Doc. "He never brought it down on the desk in front of him. Your Honor, I have no interest in this hearing further than to ascertain whether this attack on me was prompted by a malicious desire to smother my reputation or was due to the asinine stupidity of the person on my left."

"For the first in my life I stand in a dock to answer a criminal charge. What is the basis for this charge? This man had been told that I was in partnership with a scoundrel to whom he had loaned money."

"Smith told me," said the complainant, squinting at the court through his glasses.

"You haven't got any case," said the court. "Dismissed."

All turned to move out of the pen and were elbowing for the gate when Parkman turned and exclaimed: "Your Honor! Your Honor!"

"Well, what is it?"

"This man here," pointing at the freckled boy "has just now threatened me. He said he'd poke me in the eye when he got outside."

"My goodness, you believe everything people tell you, don't you?" asked the lush, grinning at Parkman.

"Come on, boys," said the lush.

"Back to him."

"This followed him up the aisle to the high desk protecting the court."

"Are the parties here?" asked the justice. "Where's—let's see—where's Horne?"

"I am he," said Doc.

"Well, get up here closer, where we can take a look at you. Where's Parkman?"

"Here," said a small man with close shaven cheeks and a pair of concave eyeglasses. The members of the colony tipped to get a look at the man.

"And who are all these?" demanded the court, pointing at the five who were close behind Doc.

"We are witnesses, your Honor," said the lush. "That is, if you need us. I'll decide as to that," said the court. "Be sworn."

A mumbled oath was recited by a busy clerk. The court looked at the plain clothes man and asked: "What do you know about the case, Clancy?"

"I served the warrant, your Honor. I know that this man [indicating Doc] and the fellow Smith that got the money from Mr. Parkman here, used together to kidnap down here and had got up some kind of a company together, and—"

"I deny it," said Doc.

"Well, hear from you later," said the court, addressing Doc. Then to Mr. Parkman: "Did this man get any property from you on false pretences? Tell your story and cut it short."

"I want to show you these," began the complainant, taking two cards from his pocket and handing them to the court. "Those are the business cards of the fraudulent concern. This man claimed to be the president of the company."

"He didn't," growled the freckled boy from his place of shelter behind the dentist.

"You fellows keep still," said the court, turning to Doc's witnesses.

"Ass this man if he ever saw me before," said Doc, who had turned a stern and unforgiving gaze on Parkman.
